The Weather

The weather still is free to all; to lordly baron in his hall, to tiller of the ground; the queenly dame has all she wants, and in the washerwoman's haunts there's weather by the pound. No greedy dealer can remark, "Alas! the prospect's pretty dark, with war in foreign states; our native weather won't suffice, and so we've had to raise the price three bucks per dozen crates." No trusts, to heap coin in their tills, can buy up smaller weather mills and corner the supply; no Wall street pirates with their snares can cinch the weather unawares and send the price sky high. We're paying more for cheese and bread, for meat and milk and melted lead, for all the things we wear; for coffins, codfish, corn and cakes, for raisins, rinktums, rags and rakes, for bear grease for our hair. We're paying more for all we use, for shaves, for sugar and shampoos, for rough on rats and rice; but still the good old weather's free, Dame Nature's gift to you and me—they cannot raise the price! What though all other boons may fail? What though we all may go to jail, as bankrupts, shorn of scads? No tyrant hand can from us wrest the blessing that we love the best—the weather of our dads!

NEW CITY POST OFFICE IS INSPECTED BY MANY

Thousands From All Parts of the Capital Attend Formal Opening.

That citizens of Washington are greatly interested in their new city post office building was fully attested last evening, when, on the occasion of its formal opening for public inspection, thousands of persons from all parts of the city visited it. Among the guests were many high in the official life of the city and of the nation. Long before 8 o'clock, the hour set for the public reception, a large crowd had gathered about the edifice. By 7:50 o'clock the assemblage in front of the southeast door, the official entrance of the evening, had become so great that it was decided to allow immediate admission to the interior, until long after 10 o'clock, the announced hour of closing, interested persons surged through the office individually and in groups.

Crowd Does Not Wait for Guides.
A number of clerks had been designated to act as guides, but so great was the crowd that a large number did not wait to be guided, but went ahead on their own initiative. Carriers and other employees stationed throughout the workrooms and halls gave all desired information to visitors, however. All of the numerous time and labor saving devices, the carriers' desks and the numerous other features received copious attention. The route of a letter from the time of sending until it passes from the hands of the city post office was followed by a number of those unfamiliar with the work of this department.

Admiration of the walls, the ceilings, the floor, the architectural features was continuous. This was also true of the ventilating and lighting systems, which are said to be on the most modern lines.

Flowers had been beautifully spread about the building, lending an added charm. From time to time the evening was enlivened by selections from the post office orchestra under the leadership of J. Ed Minnick.

Postmaster Praeger Pleased.
Otto Praeger, the postmaster, expressed himself as highly pleased at the large number of persons who came to see the new building, saying that he felt it was a compliment to that branch of the government service.

"It is a great thing for the people educationally," said Mr. Praeger. "I am glad, too, to see so many interested in the post office work."

He explained that all of the furniture was not yet in the building, but was being brought in gradually. With the new building, he expected to arrive soon 108 carriers can be taken out for each trip in the outgoing districts in about one-half the time consumed at present, he said. This will result in much better service, he explained, and also would allow for very numerous collections in the business districts, such as on a street, on Pennsylvania avenue, 14th street, 14th street and the district between 7th and 14th streets. The new service will be made so frequent that it will be possible for mail to be started toward its destination in excellent time.

DISTRICT LABOR BODIES OPPOSE NEW YORK LAW
Join in Protest Against Requirement of Finger Print Method in Industrial Insurance.

Leaders of organized labor in the District of Columbia have joined their protests to those of union labor in New York against the clause in the New York state industrial insurance law providing for the cataloguing of new fingers of all workmen coming under the operations of the law. It is stated that under the terms of the law workers are required to give a minute personal description of themselves, including age, height, weight, color of hair and eyes, physical defects, deformities, if any, and all such marks of identification. In addition, the cards of identification have spaces on which are to be made prints of the first three fingers of those described on the cards.

Too Much Like Bertillon System.
This is claimed by friends of organized labor, savors too much of the Bertillon system of identification, and strong opposition has been manifested since the law became effective. John B. Colpoys, editor of the Trades Unionist of this city, while saying that the terms of the New York law have no local application, objected in behalf of labor generally to the finger-print identification method.

"The idea of being catalogued is abhorrent to American workmen," said Mr. Colpoys. "It places him in the position of a man suspected of crime, who, after his innocence has been proven, wants all the records destroyed."

HAS CHANGED ITS VIEWS ABOUT THINGS AMERICAN

Rabbi Simon Says Europe Has Now Vast Respect for the United States.

That there is now a vast respect for the United States among the people of Europe in place of the inclination of a few years ago to sniff at things American was the declaration of Rabbi Simon, recently returned from abroad, at the "Get together" meeting last night of Washington employees of the electric service companies, held at the plant of the Potomac Electric Power Company. The pastor of the Eighth Street Temple further stated that Europe looks to this country with respect, and even the time pipe, its much-needed peace.

That the day of the soulless corporation is forever gone; that employees are paid and comfortably housed, and that patrons are served in the best manner possible, was the opinion expressed by Rev. Earle Wilkey, pastor of the Washington Avenue Methodist Church, another of the speakers, also recently returned from a European tour. Clarence F. King, president of the Washington Railway and Electric Company, made a brief address of welcome to the employees.

Technical Paper Discussed.
A technical paper on the work of the accounting department was read by George G. Whitney, chief clerk, and was discussed by John G. McLaughlin, chief clerk of the commercial department, Potomac Electric Power Company; E. S. Marlow, G. P. Mangan, S. J. Devine, William and Helphand, S. J. Devine, Mersheimer and C. Mangan, and E. S. Marlow of the lighting company.

DELAY IN DEDICATION OF KEARNEY MEMORIAL

Statue in Arlington as Tribute to Distinguished Officer of Civil War.

There has been delay in the preparation of the stones for the base and pedestal of the equestrian statue of Gen. Philip Kearney, a distinguished cavalry officer of the civil war, to be erected in the Arlington national cemetery. As a consequence, the formal dedication of the statue, which had been fixed for October 14, has been postponed until November 11 by the Kearney monument commission, which has charge of the erecting of the statue. Gen. Kearney was of that state appropriated the money for his statue in the Arlington cemetery. There are many fine monuments and other memorials in that cemetery, but up to this time the erecting of the equestrian statue has been prohibited. Secretary Garrison waived the prohibition, however, in the case of the Kearney memorial, at the special request of the state authorities of New Jersey and because of the exceptional features of the case.

Meets Death in 1892.
Gen. Kearney lost his left arm at the battle of Churubusco, Mexico, in August, 1847, and was killed in the battle of Chantilly, Va., in 1862. For many years thereafter his body rested in the cemetery of Trinity Church in New York city. In April, 1912, fifty years later, his body was removed to the Arlington national cemetery and reinterred near the graves of other heroes of the civil war.

At the reinterment addresses were made by President Taft, State Senator Prince of New Jersey, representing Gov. Wilson (now President), and Corp. James Tanner, who was a comrade of Gen. Kearney in the civil war. The equestrian group was designed by Edward C. Potter of Greenwald, and is reported to be a fine piece of work. It has been cast in bronze by the Gorham Company, at Providence, R. I., and is being forwarded to this city as soon as the pedestal is ready to receive it.

DELANVAN'S COMET NOW VISIBLE TO NAKED EYE

May Be Seen About 10 O'Clock at Night, But Best View Is Obtainable Early in Morning.

DeLavan's comet, which has for some time been the object toward which the telescopes of astronomers throughout the United States have pointed, is now visible to the naked eye, and will remain visible until the close of October. The comet may be seen about 10 o'clock at night, its location in the heavens being at a point almost directly below the Pole Star. Locating that star, the amateur observer should follow with his eyes an imaginary vertical line toward the horizon, where, in the northern sky, the celestial wanderer may be seen on any clear evening. Later at night the comet apparently rises higher in the heavens, this, of course, being due to the rotation of the earth. It is stated that best time to observe the comet is between 2 and 4 o'clock in the morning, when it reaches its greatest altitude above the horizon.

Observed through ordinary field glasses the comet appears as a brilliant body, the nucleus, or head, of the comet being so dense as to prevent an appearance almost starlike, while the tail flares away to a considerable length. Early in the evening the comet's tail lies almost parallel with the horizon, but later it appears to rise until it is noticeably higher than the head of the comet.
